Saint Bridget of Sweden was a mystic saint whose visions helped guide the Church in the 14th century. She was born in 1303 to a family that was related to the royal house of Sweden. Her father was a regional governor and a judge, and both of her parents were pious. They received the sacraments frequently and went on pilgrimages as far away as the Holy Land.

When Bridget was 10, her mother died. She was raised by an aunt, along with two younger siblings, who was just as faithful as her mother. While a young girl, Bridget started to receive visions, mostly seeing Jesus on the cross. She asked Jesus who had done this to him, and he replied, "All those who despise my love." The vision left a deep impression on her and profoundly shaped her spirituality. She continued to receive visions throughout her whole life.

When she was 13, she was married according to the custom of the time, and the couple bore eight children. One daughter was eventually canonized as St. Catherine of Sweden. She and her husband went on a pilgrimage to Santiago de Compostela in Spain. Her husband became dangerously ill on the journey, but was healed when Bridget received a vision from St. Denis, who told her that she would do great works.

The King of Sweden appointed Bridget as lady-in-waiting to his queen, and Bridget began counseling the king and queen, as well as many priests and theologians. When her husband became ill again, Bridget took him to a monastery for care. He died and was buried there, and Bridget remained at the monastery in a small room, praying and grieving.

She prayed for guidance and received a revelation that she was to establish a new religious order. She renounced her title as princess and her role at court, and was mocked for this decision. She spent the rest of her life as a pilgrim in Rome, writing of her visions and counseling kings and popes. She left Sweden before the abbey she founded was completed.

She is known as the patroness of failures, even though her endeavors saw success after her death. The religious order she founded is still active today, known as the Bridgettines, and she's the patron of Europe and Sweden. Her relics rest in the reliquary chapel of the Basilica, where she's depicted in the stained glass windows.

MISSION COOPERATIVE
Welcome Father Trinity!
A warm welcome to Father Trinity, who joins us this weekend as part of Mission Cooperative! We are deeply blessed to have him here to share the vital work of his mission & to help us grow in faith & global solidarity. Please keep Father Trinity and the communities he serves in your prayers, & be as generous as you can in your second collection to support their incredible efforts!

Thank You
To the Prayer & Action team: I am truly touched by the work you did for not just me, but our community & parish. You did an incredible job & I am so grateful for all the hard work & energy you put into serving myself & others. You are an inspiring example of faith. Thank you again, Dixie McHenry
